

Barcelona

This photo delivers my first impression of Barcelona—a slow-paced city.

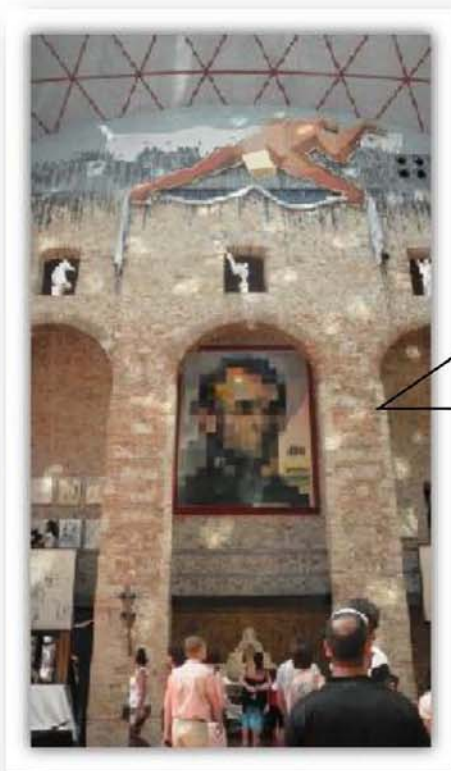

This photo was taken in the Barcelona central city. As we can see, the people in the photo, felt very comfortable with this nice weather during the summer time. What's more, Spanish feel relaxed even in their working time. Last time, I went to refund office to apply for refund. The conversation between clerks was: I bought a pretty dress in Zara with discount. Although there were many tourists waiting, clerks still keep this slow-paced work style.

The person in this photo is me. I was on the beach in Barcelona.

The funny thing is: all of Taiwanese students wore T-shirts and short pants, while playing beach volleyball with foreign students. Then foreign students asked me: why do you Taiwanese students wear so much? As you know, everyone on the beach is expected to wear bikini.

After this experience, I realized that people are expected to wear bikini on the beach. Besides, I will consider wearing bikini on the beach next time. Then I found out that it is "beach culture".

Guess who am I?

This photo was taken in Dali Museum. When I saw this work painted by Dali, I thought it was Abraham Lincoln. However, a weird thing happened when I took the photo for this painting, I saw a naked woman. After that, I admire this creative artist from the bottom of my heart, because he can present his concept of double image in a new way very well.
